With the simplest rites, the body
of Nicholas Frederic Brady, New York financier and prominent Catholic layman, was laid away yesterday in a crypt in the new Jesuit novitate near Wernersville.

mear Wernersville.

Brady's gift of more than $1,000,000 made possible the building of the novitiate in which he lies, a massive, rambling building on a high, sunny hill on the rim of the Blue mountains. The placing of his body there yesterday was the first ceremony to be held in the building, which will not be dedicated until May 31.

Although Brady died March 27, in New York, his burial there was only temporary, the final obsequies being postponed until today to permit interment in the novitiate crypt, just finished.

On Special Train

A funeral train of four cars, bearing Brady's body in a combination car draped special on the inside with rich purple hangings, carried the former chairman of the board of the New York Edison company to its final rasting place. Preliminary services were held at 6 a. m., at the Church of St. Ignacius Loyola, Eighty-Fourth street and Park avenue, New York. From the church the cortege proceeded by the Twenty-Third street ferry to the Jersey City terminal of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, where the special train was waiting.

Attached to the train was Brady's private car, "Adventurer," the combination baggage and passenger car holding the body, a dining car, and a day coach for the score or more of persons, outside relatives and friends, attached to the funeral party. The train slipped out of the Jersey City terminal with few knowing its mission.

The train made speed over the Jersey fiatlands and the rolling country between Allentown and Reading, and got into Reading nearly a half hour shead of schedule. A line of automobiles was waiting for it at the station at Wernersville, for the mile-long drive through sunny fields to the novitate, where the party went directly to the crypt for a low mass of requiem. The Rev. Thomas A. Delehant, New York, close friend of the Brady family, sang the mass, several score of prominent Catholic officials, educators, priests and Jesuits were present.

of gardenias and orchids in the vestioule.

That tiny chapel will see another funeral, for before his death Nicholas Brady provided that the crypt should be used for the burial of his wife.

After the mass, the party was shown through the novitate, but Mrs. Brady stayed back for a brief moment to pray silently and alone in the crypt. She rejoined the others in the main chapel on the first floor to look about the great building which she and her husband
made possible.

The half-hour's inspection over, the party returned to the special train waiting for them at the Wernersville station and returned to New Xork.

Brady was chairman of the board of the New York Edison company and a director of the United Electric Light and Power company, the National City company, the National City bank, the Ananconda company, and numerous other financial and business institutions. He was recognized as one of the leading Catholic laymen of the United States.

For Training Young Men

In the entrance hallway of the novitiate which he built is an inscription to him and Mrs. Brady. It reads: "This novitiate for the training of young men destined to be priests or brothers in the Society of Jesus was erected in 1928-1929 by Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Frederic Brady and is placed at their request under the patronage of the heroic apostle of the Hurons, Isaac Jogues, martyr priest of the Society of Jesus."

The novitiate, which will eventually house 200 young men training for the Jesuit priesthood, occupies a hill-side plot of nearly 300 acres about a mile northeast of the borough of Wernersville. It is valued at considerably more than $1,000,000, and contains rare marbles, paintings and carvings among its furnishings.

The Jesuit priest for whom the building has been named, Isaac Jogues, was a missionary among the Huron Indians of New York and, believed to be a sorcerer, was tortured and decapitated in 1646. He is about to be canonized by the Catholic church.

The novitiate, when it is completed and in use, will be one of the largest educational institutions in the Lebanon valley.
